PHYSIOTHERAPY

The number of physiotherapists in Canada is growing at a rate of 5.4% per year, which works out to roughly 1,000 new professionals graduating from university programs. The demand for their services is being driven by three long-term trends:

Shorter hospital stays require more post-discharge care. Hospitals are pushing this responsibility into the private sector in order to increase patient turnover times.

Higher survival rates from operations and incidents lead to more post-operative care. For example, better constructed cars lead to more minor injuries requiring physical therapy, as opposed to death in the past.

Aging populations require more in-house treatment

FASTER TURNAROUND

- Discharge patients more quickly from the emergency room and other departments (post-operation, etc.)

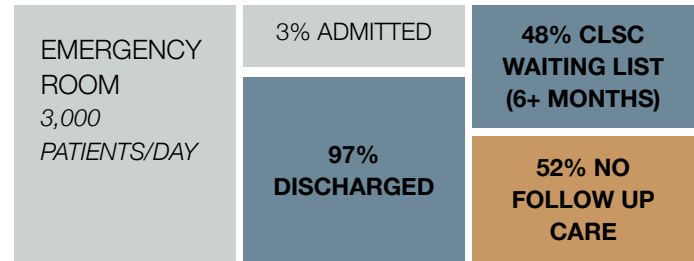

UNCLOG THE SYSTEM

- Maximize utilization of patient's existing care options and insurance coverage.
- Remove patients who don't need to rely on public care from waiting lists.
- Leave more space for those in need of the free option to get care quickly.

MAKE IT BETTER

- More efficient distribution of available health care resources.
- No additional cost to the hospital.

TYPICAL EMERGENCY ROOM FLOW

“Having this option for my patients gives me the confidence to send them home sooner. I know they will get the care they need.”
